

Giant mechs conquer Spain!

Alicante, Spain, November 5, 2020. The Finns at ORICO interactive, creators of the cross platform online Mech shooter and the comic series, Void of Heroes, choose Alicante's digital district to set up a new business development department in Spain.

The Mechs are conquering Spain through the Void of Heroes comic series, already available in stores in the sector, published by Panini. At the same time, ORICO interactive has created an immersive combination of competitive gaming tied to the cartoon industry.

In Void of Heroes, you can control the dark destiny of Mechs, their pilots and more while enjoying dizzying battles. The physical and digital version of the comic is fully compatible with the video game and offers players the opportunity to experience the world of Void of Heroes. The printed comics contain redeem codes that players can use in the game to get all sorts of in-game treats.

There are two game modes: 4v4 Team Deathmatch and Battle Royale Arena with up to 10 players. There is also a unique game mechanic involved; a death zone that rises vertically instead of the already familiar shrinking circle.

Void of Heroes is available on the App Store, Google Play and Steam.

Delve into a world long past its glory days, where the ruins of society are buried under ground, the stillness now only broken by mechanical thuds of forgotten servants. In the darkness flaring explosions briefly light up the surroundings as old machines fail, taxed to extremes as age takes its toll. In the midst of this ruin, something stirs. A sentience long bereft of purpose or function, finds itself in the middle of a void. It wants to escape.
